The children's day exercises at the M. E. church last Sunday morning were unusually interesting, besides being instructive, and can hardly fail to prove of lasting benefit in creating patriotic sentiment.

At the minister's meeting in the M. E. church last Monday morning, after a general discussion of the question, "The good and evil in our national holiday," the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS—So many and so great are the evils attending the ordinary celebration of our national holiday, July 4, resulting in the dissipation of the young of both sexes, and

WHEREAS—The spirit of patriotism is thereby prostituted to ignoble and selfish personal aggrandizement, in that most, if not all, of those who contribute the support of the program of the day, do so with no higher motive than the thought that for every dollar thus given they shall receive back three or five or ten, thus making a day of spoils and not of patriotic sentiment, and

WHEREAS—The ordinary sports and games are not only most of them of a questionable character, but wholly vulgar and degrading to morals and life; therefore be it

Resolved—That we, the preachers of Paw Paw, in the interest of good morals and patriotic sentiment, do unhesitatingly condemn this wretchedness on our glorious Fourth of July, with its sacred and inspiring memories, that which tends to build up pure patriotism and loyalty to the right, and substituting therefor only degrading and disgusting notions of national honor and civil virtue; and

Resolved—That we use our personal influence, as well as the influence of the positions we occupy, to build up a better public sentiment in regard thereto.

BEARS AFTER GRANT.

HOW THE GREAT MILITARY MAN MANEUVERED FOR TIME.

Three Trout From the Wagon to Appense Brains' Appetite—The Bears Wanted Bigger Game, but Didn't Get It—The Old McKane County Guide's Story.

"General Grant was a great lover of trout fishing," said a guide, "and the greatest of all his outings was at Kane, McKane county, Pa., in August, 1869. I received a letter late in July of that year requesting that I get everything ready for a two weeks' fishing tour on the Oswayo creek.

"This stream flows through the northwestern part of Potter county, one of the wildest forest sections. At that time I was living at Kane and spent all my time in the woods hunting and fishing.

"General Grant usually was accompanied by one or more companions, but this time he came to Kane alone. It was then, prior to leaving Kane for Oswayo creek, that General Grant wrote his letter to Secretary of State Fish concerning the belligerency of Cuba. We were delayed 24 hours on account of that letter, because General Grant spent the whole day in thinking the situation over. The general was glad to get the subject off his mind for the time being, as he remarked to me, 'Well, that settles Cuban matters with me until I return from this trout fishing trip.'

"I had the general's rod and flies in shape. We got on my old spring wagon and started for a farmhouse near Sharon Center. The roads were rough, and by the time we had covered the distance of 37 miles we were tired out, and the old horse lay down. It was about 10 o'clock at night when we reached John Haberstein's home in the country. He had been expecting us and assisted in putting up the horse and showed us the rooms we were to occupy. We did not go to the trout stream the following day. 'Rest is more desirable than trout,' is the way the general put it.

"While Haberstein was not acquainted with Grant prior to our arrival, he was a fast friend of mine, as we had gone to school together. General Grant soon made a warm friend of Haberstein.

"The first day's fishing along Oswayo creek was successful, and we returned with a number of trout. It was a difficult place to reach, and the country simply abounded with wild game. The general was fond of seeing deer go through the woods and was not a bit afraid of bears.

"General Grant was an expert fisherman and could whip a stream with any of the pot fishers. He would never fish for trout with bait. But if it so happened that he had lost all his flies, he would put on whatever he could find and continue to whip the stream. The two of us in five days' fishing caught 712 trout, all good sized ones. We ate some of them, and the rest were packed in ice to be sent to friends.

"I shall never forget our return from Sharon Center to Kane. We had everything on the spring wagon, including the iceed trout. After traveling about four miles we passed through an exceptionally heavy woodland, and when we were about 200 yards from the woods two bears made their appearance. They trotted along after us at a gait that showed us that they were gaining on the horse. They evidently had scented the fish and were wishing for a good meal.

"We did not feel much afraid until we came to discover that our guns and revolvers were left behind at Haberstein's house. The bears were gradually gaining on us, and it was time to be thinking about doing something.

"What's to be done in a case of this kind?" queried the general.

"The only thing I know of is to drive so fast that they can't catch up," I replied. But the faster we drove the more rapidly the bears ran.

"I know how to get away from them," exclaimed Grant. "We will throw trout to the ground, a few feet apart, and as the bears stop to pick them up we will gain so much by every fish."

"Well, that looked like a great scheme. We began throwing the fish out, two or three at a time. The bears began to pick them up, but I'll be confounded if they didn't start to give the trout the go by and hasten their steps to catch up to the wagon. All the time we kept throwing choice trout into the road to coax them bears to quit the chase.

"We concluded that the old horse would have to hurry. The whip was applied. We lost the bears, and in the village related the story of the bears following us to several farmers, who got guns and started after them.

"Do you know what those confounded bears were doing when they found them? They stopped at the end of the trout trail and for a distance of a mile and a half back had eaten nearly all the trout. They evidently wanted bigger game, and when they saw they could not get it they were content to eat trout. The bears were overtaken and killed.

"At the village we looked to see how many trout we had left. To our surprise we had only 250 out of the 700."—New York Press.

English-Cove Dwellers.

Reminiscences of Them Found in the Region Made Merry by Robin Hood.

The town of Nottingham is 124 miles north of London. A part of the town is on low lying ground close to the river Trent, where floods sometimes occur, but the rest of the town is built on a series of red sandstone hills. It is situated on the southeastern fringe of the great Derbyshire coal field, and the historic forest of Sherwood formerly spread almost up to the city walls. Now this forest has, in a great measure, been cut down, and this has reduced the rainfall, raised the temperature and rendered the climate of the town drier and more bracing than it used to be. The mean annual rainfall is now 25 inches and the temperature 47 degrees. As sandstone is soft and easily cut it is only natural that the early dwellers in caves came and lived in holes dug in the hills of Nottingham, particularly as the forest close at hand was a good hunting ground where game could be captured for food.

Bronze and other tools employed by these early and prehistoric inhabitants are occasionally found, and the first name known to have been given to the place was Nottingham. This in Celtic means "the home among the rocks."

Afterward it became one of the towns of the kingdom of Mercia, and in the ninth and tenth centuries was one of the five chief northern strongholds of the Danes. Already what is now known as the Castlehill was a strongly fortified position, and it was in his attempt to capture this fortress that Alfred the Great was signally defeated by the Danes. Two hundred years later, when William the Conqueror in his turn subjugated the Saxons, he rebuilt the castle of Nottingham and placed it under the command of his natural son, William Peverel.

But it was here also that Saxon resistance continued for many a long year, for it was in the great forest hard by that Robin Hood and his merry men dwelt. These outlaws were Saxons who were dissatisfied with the Norman rule and preferred a life of brigandage to submission. The holes dug in the rocks, the passages made through the sandstone mountains, enabled these bold forerunners to occasionally appear in the town and close under the Norman battlements.—Boston Post.

BAD BILL'S BREAK.

It Was a Sensational Feature and Shut Up the Whole Revival.

Bad Bill was a well known character in the west, and there are many stories told of his exploits, but one of the best has never been printed, and was related to a reporter by a man who was present when it occurred.

Great Bend, Kan., now one of the best towns in the state, was at one time about the worst. That was when it was a railroad terminus before Dodge City was established.

A traveling evangelist went to Great Bend and tried to start a revival. There were a few Christians in town, and these all attended the first meeting, the only one of the unregenerate present being Bad Bill, who took a front seat. Every one feared trouble when he walked into the church, but he sat quietly during the exhortation. The evangelist requested all who wanted to go to heaven to stand up, and every person present except Bill arose. When they were seated again, Bill got up, and, drawing two pistols, said:

"You say you want to go to heaven. Now, anything I can do to help this game along and give pleasure to the players, I'm in for. You all want to go to heaven, and I'll give you as good a chance as you'll ever have. The first man that gets up I'll give him a ticket clean through, without any stop overs."

The evangelist crawled under a seat and the members of the congregation laid on the chairs.

"Well," said Bill, "I see you wasn't in earnest, so we'll put out the lights and call this meeting adjourned." One by one he shot out the lights, and by morning the evangelist was on his way to Hutchinson, while the members of the congregation kept quiet and made no further attempts at holding a revival.—Washington Star.

Paid For the Pleasure.

During a journey of the Emperor Joseph II to Italy the wheels of his coach broke down on the road, so that it was with difficulty that he reached a small village at a short distance. On his arrival there his majesty got out at the door of the only blacksmith shop in the town and desired him to repair the wheel without delay. "That I would do willingly," replied the smith, "but it being holiday all my men are at church. The boy who blows the bellows is not at home."

"An excellent method then presents of warming oneself," replied the emperor, who was unknown to the smith, and he set about blowing the bellows while the blacksmith forged the iron. The wheel being repaired, 6 sols were demanded for the job, but the emperor gave 6 ducats.

The blacksmith returned them to the traveler, saying, "Sir, you have made a mistake, and instead of 6 sols, have given me 6 pieces of gold which no one in the village can change."

"Change them when you can," said the emperor, stepping into the carriage. "An emperor should pay for such a pleasure as that of blowing the bellows."

Talent.

The world is always ready to receive talent with open arms. Very often it does not know what to do with genius. Talent is a docile creature. It bows its head meekly while the world slips the collar over it. It backs into the shafts like a lamb.—Holmes.
